We are all part of the same material reality.

A slice of spacetime from the “past” features me taking the subsequent photographs of 13 packaged foodstuffs displaced from their origins. Foodstuffs that will likely eventually enter my body. “Future” slices of spacetime may feature me opening the packaging, consuming what is inside, unconsciously participating in chemical reactions that transform what was food into mental-physical activity, then again displacing the “precipitates” of those reactions...

The following is an examination of the extent of displacement of foodstuffs I have accumulated. Through imperfect information about their supply chain, I map out minimum distances of displacement. Using what I know of my daily average distance thru-hiking over moderate terrain (18 km/day), I translate the distance into the physical scale of my own body and the temporal scale of 24-hour human circadian rhythm.
